

The path to avoiding digital transformation failure

Delivering technology programmes can be difficult, but if pitfalls are avoided through planning and actions executed effectively, organisations will deliver transformative outcomes.

Set realistic goals

Involve all stakeholders in project definition and mobilisation, to ensure expectations are set at achievable levels and the requirements are in place before any technology is purchased removing one of the most common routes to failure.

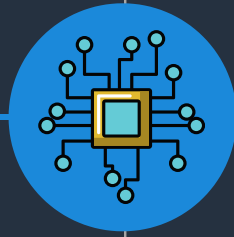

Assess Current Ways of Working

Ensure all stakeholders are aware of the intent of the overall programme and what is required of them to deliver it.

Tailor your framework

The framework needs to be tailored and prescriptive right down to individual team members to ensure deliverables are understood and laid out clearly. The delivery lifecycle must be achievable.

Continued alignment

Having a guiding coalition that spans the organisation, is trusting and meets to discuss issues as well as successes will deliver on their obligations to ensure success.

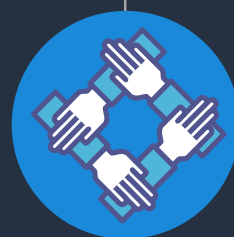

Manage your programmes

Prioritising improvement recommendations and monitoring the implementation of all agreed interventions will ensure projects are delivered successfully.
